

Team Triumph

Triumph, the long established storage designer and manufacturer based in South Wales, has strengthened its whole sales and marketing management team with a series of new appointments.

Robin Macloskey, with long experience at Steelcase both in the UK and US markets, moves in as the new director of sales.

Mark Bennett, after senior positions at Haworth and Hermann Miller, takes on the new role of key accounts manager for Triumph in the UK.

Tony Hendrick, previously of Bulo and Beyon, moves to a senior marketing role in promoting Triumph's new design initiatives and Triumph's interests on major projects – both domestic and overseas. While Steve Pember remains director of public sector contracts, a market in which he has helped Triumph to make strong inroads in recent years.

These changes come as Triumph move into a major new product development programme with new designs for personal storage and lateral filing systems, these were recently unveiled for the first time at the Context Exhibition in Earls Court 2 last month (see story on previous page).

Commenting on all this, Andrew Jackson, Triumph's CEO said: "We are very pleased with the way Triumph has been able to build on its reputation on the sales and marketing front. This integrated team will not only strengthen our sales capabilities across the board, but will allow us to move forward, and widen our appeal to new and broader market segments."
