Triumph extends product range with new Buyers Guide. Introducing Metrix^{adv} tambours + Superglider for business partners

Triumph today announced the launch of new Metrix^{adv} tambours and SuperGlider sliding doors, completing the Metrix modular system.

An example of how Triumph has uniquely combined design with functionality - which is now key in modern office design trends.

Triumph also offer its dealer partners specific support at everyone of the stages on a major project - all the way from original briefing, space planning and 3D visualisation to detailed project management, manufacturing, installation, logistics and final delivery.

Into this process it fits its comprehensive range of workplace furniture: systems of industry standard cupboards, combination units and tambour door options and lockers all designed to complement the required aesthetic on any major office project.

With this programme Triumph aims to provide dealers with a complete port folio of support which will enable them to compete credibly and effectively in today's market.

It is all brought together in a new dealer friendly website, which is category based and offers easy navigation to help any dealer find exactly what's needed quickly and easily.

All in all, using Triumph means that dealers can produce working spaces that can have a direct impact of the performance of a business and its ability to motivate its people.

Speaking of the new launch, Andrew Jackson, Chief Executive Officer of Triumph said,

“At Triumph we know that it is the combination of price, specification and time that are crucial to any project success, using these new products and this new dealer facility means that a dealers clients should never be compromised in any of these areas, so that all projects can be delivered on plan, on time and to budget.”
